MS. LESUE'S 2019 POETRY CONTEST WINNERS

B1

1st - "The Nuclear Maze" by Brandon May

2nd - "Like Stars in the Sky" by Jason Clair

3rd - "Untitled" by Andrew Oblad

The Nuclear Maze

Dating her was like running through a labyrinth.

You never knew when you would make a wrong turn.

Her intentions were clear as mud.

Her perfume intoxicated--

Snoop Dogg in Las Vegas.

The chocolate tasted creamy and delicious at first, but quickly turned bitter.

The way she grabbed my hand, deceptive.

How she said my name, paralyzing.

I wore a bright-yellow mask around her.

Not a labyrinth, but a clear pathway.

Her nail polish smelled crunchy.

The messages from her said,

Bae, ily, yeet, lmao, lmfao, gtg, brb, rn, ttly.

She lit the fuse, and the relationship blew up.

Why must she move the remotes every time! Or wait, the soap and cup on the sink always switch places! Why mom, why?

The red maze of confusion is dying.

The shattered glass in my heart was warm and fuzzy.

She flew always flying around like a fly.

She pitched me blue apples.

My name is Deenie. Why is Brandon always being so indecisive!

He will soon make a vague mistake, and it will cause him great pain.

Ugh! I am just so sick of her being so good at being dumb!

Hasta Luego!

The dry-wooded match of her misinterpretations struck against the rough cement. The flame came to life, bright and warm. She went to light the long-stringy fuse, of the dynamite.

Kaboom!!!

A gigantic, smoky mushroom cloud billowed up into the sky!

1st - "Clockwork" by Maggie Van Orman

2nd - "My Crush" by Cassidy Dalton

3rd - "Beauty and the Dance" by Tyson Burk

Clockwork

You tossed me to the side like a broken clock that had run out of time.

I watched my tears hit the pavement as I listened to your footsteps fading in the distance.

Seconds, minutes, hours, days. Time continued to race forward but the moment you left me stayed frozen in my mind.

I clung to the love you'd forgotten, ignoring the deep chasm of disregard that tore us apart.

Thinking back, I remember the good times we had. The laughter we shared and the tears we cried, blissfully unaware of the difficult goodbye that lay ahead of me.

Little did I know that you were a grifter, a con artist and half-hearted man, locking away my heart and throwing away the key.

Soon enough you dissolved before my eyes, leaving behind nothing but an empty chair and a broken heart.

I flashed a broken smile in your direction, drawing attention away from my tear-filled eyes.

Before long I realized our love was not forgotten, but abandoned.

The lonely company of love swept over me.

Whispering "Meu Inima Te Iubesc, my heart I love you", I rose to my feet.

I hate love, but I long to be loved.

The broken clock continued to tick.

1st - "Spring's First Breath" by Hadley Smith

2nd - "Posing" by Daphne Holman

3rd - "The Unknown Chapter" by Tyler Reynaud

Spring's First Breath

The frozen Gentle claws of winter have finally opened,
Et l'inspiration frappe- And Inspiration strikes.
I plan to perch on my rooftop,
And meditate for least a half-hour of my day,
Because If you don't stop to smell the roses,
Your toes will fall off from overuse.

School is now out, and I am ready to perch on the roof.
Jynx the orange Ford bounces down Salem Mainstreet,
Matching the beat of the coming spring,
And the sun carries me through my day.
Fresh grass clippings floating under my nose,
I jump out of my beautifully-obnoxious car,
Mint gum dances through my mouth,
Voices climbing then tumbling down the musical scale pump through My earbuds,
And I devise a plan to reach my roof.
I jump,
The plastic trash can caves beneath my feet,
And I reach up to my wall.

I hate to walk on the edge, but I will gladly sit on it any day.
I sit on my roof and reminisce about fun times,
Thinking about friends and family.
Looking around, I collect flowers and hills in my hands and weave a magic carpet that Floats me to bliss.
The mountains sing to me, the valley whispers it's secrets as wind Dances on my cheeks.
I feel the chaos of calmness.
The world is not bleak and gray, but colorful and bright bursting with Sun rays.
The sky a blue jay taking me under its wing, the grass green as Emeralds, and the flowers pinker than baby cheeks,
I can hear the tulips blooming.

I peer out at the ice tipped mountains, the crisp trees, and taste the Peace in the air.

1st and Overall Winner - "Stir" by Reed Barrett

2nd - "The Clash" by Caleb Fausett

3rd - "Ocean Tides & Wakes" by Triston Sparrow

Stir

sleep is happiness
they're not the same
sleep is happiness
as you chase,
happy happens less
it's not a race,
but each evades

if you lay, you lay awake be tired do it.
need sleep, and you'll smell an insidious scent of restlessness in the very room which you itch to leave try harder think.

count sheep, and you'll find humongously unwelcome flocks keep track of every blandly flat second since your aching head hit the paltry pillow measure every unfortunately conscious moment in inconsequential, unimportantly incidental, negligibly inessential terror-dactyls
such a redundant tirade on a redundant topic

ready for bed
I don't know which is more deafening... my screaming need for restful relief or the silence of a home in which I can't sleep the ability to have it (almost) all, anything but what I want this ridiculousness is my own politically-charged "discussion" my supposed-to-be slumber characterized by a state of steady vexation a senseless disturbance as scrumptious as coarse, plainly vanilla cake

I can smell the burn of would-be dreaming harass my nasal passages

I want intense REM so badly I can taste the tiredness of tomorrow nonsensical, fortune-telling certainty of my future energy's scarcity a mentality so irrational I read unproductivity scrawled across the back of my eyelids

I've got loads of disposable liveliness I so desperately don't desire get ready for the best part the most hilariously unfunny aspect of these ramblings so recklessly composed the most idiotically ironic idea behind the aim of this entire design the intention of these readings writings of trying too hard to succeed this poem is ultimately it's own epitome an exact antithesis of what each word pleads almost as self-defeating as love now that's amour

I yearn to slumber
almost as much as I despise lying in bed

I just wish I would've, could've (whether or not I should've) spent this time of reading and rewriting and writing and rereading Sleeping

Students' Choice Award - "Found" by Elyse Alexander

Found

I've been painting pictures of reassurance and safety on you but that's not what I have anymore
Just waiting in lonely doorways for you to turn around and look back again
I looked through all your things and made it harder to breathe
The sad truth is I still haven't said goodbye
Deep down my stomach spins and I feel your dark
My friends say that it's best if I don't hear you or see your face
I ate my words and they tasted oh-so bitter
Then found a fresh scented wind to push me along this strident hill
It tore down the unkind painting
And put up some new ones that would love me for me
Suddenly she racked her abstract brain, the moving walls that sit within it
And found a sense of love for the person she had been

From then on I chose to not let you break my fall
Since I said goodbye I find it very easy to ignore the feeling
I recognize your influence was at times unimpeachable
But most times I would fret and have trouble finding peace
It's possible to let gratitude overflow and miss someone you love
While recognizing they're not good for you, and declare yourself inviolable

I miss you, but l'amour pour moi est tout ce dont j'ai besoin
The love I have for myself is all that I need
